

C.B. BUXTON BEATS DONALD WOODWARD

Huntington Valley Player Wins by 2 Up in Columbia Club Golf Tourney.

MEETS WALTER J. TRAVIS IN FINALS THIS AFTERNOON

Latter Has Easy Time Winning Over P. A. Proal of Deal Club of New Jersey by 3 Up and 1.

In one of the hardest-fought matches of the Columbia Country Club's fall golf tournament C. B. Buxton of the Huntington Valley Club this morning defeated Donald Woodward of the Columbia Country Club 2 up in the semi-finals of the first sixteen. This match featured the morning play, and a large gallery followed the play.

Woodward made a splendid finish to his match after being four down at the fourteenth hole. He won the fifteenth and sixteenth holes in par, and on the seventeenth ran down a thirty-four putt for a 2, making him only 1 down at the last hole.

Buxton played a splendid match to his match, winning the match going down in 5, while Woodward's third shot carried almost over the green, leaving him no chance to win the match in the face of his opponent's correct play. The gallery was on the hill overlooking the home hole, and at the end of the match Woodward was heartily congratulated on putting up such a strong battle.

The Travis-Proal match was similar to the others in the first and second rounds, the New Yorker winning out with comparative ease. Travis seemed to have been in reserve throughout the match, but the prospects around the clubhouse are predicting he will win all his reverses to win in the final this afternoon against Buxton.

High Wind Hurts Play.

The wind from the northwest this morning almost reached the velocity of a gale, and the golfers found it very trying in driving either against it or with it. The temperature took quite a drop, and heavy sweaters were the pronounced style for all the players. The tourney officials were on hand early, as usual, and sent the drivers off on their journey on schedule time.

The semi-final matches in the first sixteen attracted the most attention, and what gallery there was followed these two pairs. The club house prophesied that the match between Woodward and Buxton would be a winner over Proal and Travis.

The course has dried out nicely since the opening drive, and this morning the drives from the tees have been better than those of the previous week. The wind and high clouds have been a help, while driving almost in the teeth of the wind, C. B. Buxton, who is a member of the club, has been a help in the match.

Opening up the final day's play as heretofore, the fifth sixteen representatives were sent away first in the semi-finals, in which N. E. Sprague beat C. A. Williams, 3 up and 2, and W. B. Branner beat P. L. Hodges, 4 up and 2.

Few Upsets Yesterday.

The matches in the second round yesterday afternoon, which were played too late for publication in The Star, went through according to calculations of the experts, but few upsets occurred. In the first sixteen it was thought that L. L. Harban would give Walter J. Travis a better argument, but he proved easy for the New York star. The ex-champion went through the match, the hole and the hole, taking things easy when he found that he had things his own way. Harban collected around the clubhouse, but he missed an easy putt that would have won him the match.

Donald Woodward, although going splendidly this fall, was expected to lose a difficult match in the second round. He was beaten by 5 up and 4 to go. All eyes of the club were on Woodward, as the best players from out of town were there, and it was hoped that he would win the match. He was only one left. Weaver had a great many friends around the clubhouse, but he was not expected to win. The Quaker City expert, but the visitor scored an easy victory.

One of the closest matches of the afternoon developed in the third sixteen between C. B. Buxton and Donald Woodward. This match was up and down from the first hole on, and the hole and the hole. Both went down in five on the nineteenth, but on the twentieth Doyle made a brilliant putt, and by a nice putt, Seranage should have won the match on the first extra hole as he got up better, but he missed an easy putt that was extremely costly.

During the afternoon quite a large gallery collected around the clubhouse and the clubhouse galleries, and the Travis-Harban match carried many enthusiasts all around the course.
